TYPE MEDIEVAL, MAERDREF. Rank: 1

SUMMARY

DESCRIPTION Derrick Pratt has made out a solid case for a 'maerdref' at Chirk based on the presence of the name 'Y Faerdre', a sub-township name, which he believed indicated a nucleated settlement here in pre-Mortimer days, and in the term 'Y Waun a'r Faerdre', an occasionally used name for Lower Chirk. Additionally, the dwelling known as Llwyn-y-cil (SJ 2796 3807) lying between and equidistant from the castle and the town was formerly named 'Maerdy' or 'Mardy'. Melville Richards on the other hand claimed 'Y Faerdref' as a full township. The 1391 survey of Chirkland records that both the free tenants and the bondsmen ('nativi') at Chirk were responsible for maintaining the hall, chamber, kitchen and grange of the lord at Chirk, which sounds very much like the situation that would have obtained in the time when the lordship was in Welsh hands. For Pratt these were the toponymic remnants of a classic 12th-century 'maerdref', and the 'llys' (though he did not use this term) was the earthwork motte (or at least its site) in the grounds of the 'The Mount' on the edge of Chirk village, though he also envisaged that the motte would have been discarded in favour of something less restrictive than the motte top well before the Edwardian Conquest. This information in outline, speculative as it is, has been repeated in the NMR (Coflein). (Silvester 2015).

TYPE MEDIEVAL, CROSS INCISED STONE. Rank: 1

SUMMARY This was in Chirk Castle, but was sold, possibly when the family moved out. It appeared in a London dealer's catalogue in 2005 and is now in private hands (Dr M Gray; RS 03/2010).

DESCRIPTION A sepulchral slab described by RCAHMW in 1914, but now lost. The face is decorated with an ornate cross, the head of which is formed of a four-lobed flower. The inscription has been partially cut away and interpretation is difficult. The suggested date was 1320-1350 (Plunkett Dillon, E & Latham, J, 1988, 13). Inscribed slab to John, son of Nicholas, precentor, with an accompanying poem. Madeleine Grey thinks it could be 14th or even 15th century while Gresham expressed the view that it might have come originally from England. When last heard of, in 2005, this was in an antique dealer's shop in London, having come from the chapel in the Castle and presumably been sold on when the family sold up a few years ago. Maddy Grey could garner little extra information, other than it had been sold on and was now in private hands. It is fully described as Gresham 21. (Silvester et al, 2011)

PRN 22993 NAME Chirk Castle, Whitehurst Gardens

NGR SJ288400, SJ2883839971 COMMUNITY Chirk

TYPE POST MEDIEVAL, GARDEN. Rank: 1

SUMMARY

DESCRIPTION Designations Listed building: Whitehurst House (Grade II); Garden Walls (Grade II). Reasons for designation Survival of seventeenth-century walled garden of Chirk Castle, including tiered curving fruit walls, gates, banqueting house and mount. Type of site Walled garden. Main construction phases Seventeenth century Description Whitehurst House is a seventeenth-century two-storey brick and stone house under a slate roof. It is thought that when the house was first built it was of one storey only, the second storey and bay window on the south front being added in the eighteenth century. There is a two-storey bay window on the south end of the house with pitched and slated roof. Next to the house is a nineteenth-century house of brick with a double pitched slate roof. The gardens are situated about two kilometres north of Chirk Castle, and lie adjacent to the A5. Because the gardens are in divided ownership there are two entrances. Access to Whitehurst House is directly off the A5 via a pair of plain black iron gates with tall panelled sandstone gate piers, probably late seventeenth-century in date. The piers were surmounted by elaborate stone urns topped by pyramids of fruit. These fell to the ground some time ago, and their fragments are now in store. The other entrance is to the south, also off the A5. The gardens lie on sloping ground facing south. A roughly rectangular area is enclosed by stone walls on the south, west and most of the east sides, and by brick ones on the north and rest of the east sides, the north wall having an outer skin of stone. In the north wall is an oak studded door (a recent replacement for a similar door which was burnt) over which is a keystone carved with the initials 'R M' (Richard Myddleton) and the date '1765'. The north half of the interior is laid out in a series of terraces divided by four curving brick walls which were originally used for fruit growing. The walls survive, except part of the second wall going up the slope, only the west end of which is extant. Subsequent to their building a gateway and steps were inserted in the wall between the first and second terraces. The wall over the gateway was rebuilt and a keystone carved with the initials 'T M' (Thomas Myddleton) and the date '1651' was added. It would appear that this is not in situ and has been moved from elsewhere in the garden. A banqueting house is built into the lowest wall on the west end. This is a late seventeenth-century or early eighteenth-century square brick building with a pyramidal slate roof. The entrance is directly on to the first floor. Against the top wall is the frame of a lean-to glasshouse in poor condition. The 1905 Ordnance Survey map shows a number of glasshouses at the west end of the terraces, but this one was not then in existence. Next to it are nineteenth-century lean-to brick buildings, probably built as potting sheds and for general storage. The centre of the garden is a level area, part of which is overgrown and part of which is taken up by a playground. A slight depression may indicate the presence at one time of a pond, but there is no direct evidence for this. Near the boundary on the south side of the garden is a conical, flat-topped mount, the banks of which are planted with hazel coppice. It is surmounted by a yew tree. Twelve semi-detached cottages are situated on the east boundary of the walled garden. They were built in the early twentieth century as miners' cottages. The garden was built by the 2nd Sir Thomas Myddleton in the middle of the seventeenth century, confirmed by the 'T M 1651' keystone. It was both productive and ornamental. A note in the Chirk Castle Accounts (I, Note 117, p.36) describes it as a place where Sir Thomas Myddleton could entertain his friends, as it was convenient to those travelling north and south through the village, and thus they were saved nearly two miles journey to the castle. The accounts record purchases of plants for the garden, and the building of banqueting houses. The garden was described by Thomas Dineley in The Beaufort Progress (1684) as being an 'Admirable Walled GARDEN of Trees Plants Flowers and Herbs of the greatest rarity as well forreigne as of Great Britain, Orrenge and Lemon Trees the Sensitive Plant & c', where Sir Richard Myddleton entertained the 1st Duke of Beaufort to a collation of 'choice fruits and wines' in a banqueting house. The main evidence for its early appearance lies in the 1735 drawing by Thomas Badeslade of 'The West Prospect of Chirk Castle'. This shows the layout of the garden in some detail, including the curving terraces and the mount. The southern and eastern parts of the garden are shown as plantations, with rows of conifers along the west and north boundaries and across the centre. The mount is shown with radiating rides cut through plantations on its slopes, and a spiral ride up to the top, which is planted with a single conifer. The drawing shows a building, no longer extant, in the same wall as the present banqueting house but further to the east. Another building is shown above it on the second terrace. These are probably the banqueting houses mentioned in the accounts. Immediately to the east of the walled garden and directly outside the boundary wall is the Black Park, the largest of the three parks belonging to the Chirk Castle estate. It was estimated that the park was 'in Circuyt ywo myles, in length half a myle and in breadth a quart of a myle'.

SUMMARY Triangular 17th-century ornamental canal

DESCRIPTION Excavation in 2016, indicated that the canal may have been relatively shallow, with gently-sloping sides. The earliest known depiction is Badeslade's drawing of 1735, this shows a perspective view, rather than depicting the gardens in plan. The earliest plan showing the layout of the gardens dates from 1775 and depicts curving terraces and formal borders surrounding three sides of a triangular canal.

SUMMARY

DESCRIPTION The church was probably built in the late 12th century. It consists of two rectangular, parallel chambers with an engaged tower at the West end of the North body. The original church probably consisted of a South aisle and chancel, with the North aisle added in the 15th century.; (CAS 4/12/93) (SMR,1996) The roof over the aisle is old and good, the one over the nave is new and poor. Over the altar is molded plaster. (Lloyd-Williams and Underwood, 1872, Plate 48).

PRN 19770 NAME Chirk Church (St Mary), yard

NGR SJ29143762 COMMUNITY Chirk

TYPE MEDIEVAL, CHURCHYARD. Rank: 1

SUMMARY

DESCRIPTION The earliest churchyard at Chirk was strictly rectangular, but it has been extended eastwards at least twice in 1882 and 1905, and again in 1939. It occupies level ground, but the edge of the Dee valley is less than 100m to the south. It is well-maintained and the eastern extension is used for burial. Boundary:- a well-mortared stone wall with coping stones on the south and west. The wall is less uniform on the north. Monuments:- few are left in place around the church for there has been drastic clearance; there is nothing of pre-19thC date and some of the visible burials are modern. The paths leading past the church are paved with grave slabs. Some are certainly 18thC, the earliest seen being of 1737 but much worn. East of the church the gravemarkers remain in situ. Furniture:- a sundial inscribed 'W Potter, R. Edwards, Churchwardens. W & S Jones, 30 Holborn, London'. No obvious date. Gnomon in place and the dial raised on an octagonal, niched pillar. Also a cross on a four-step plinth, erected in memory of J. Darlington (1933). Earthworks:- churchyard is raised by up to 1m on the south, and 0.5m or so on the west and north. On the east is a slight drop down into the churchyard extension. Spoil mounded up on the north side of the church is presumably a result of the construction of the new hall (see below). Ancillary features:- new hall added to the north side of the church in recent years. Half-timbered lychgate with stone-slabbed roof, of 1923, on west; tarmac paths on west, slab paths to east. Vegetation:- yews on south and east, mature but of no great age. Original eastern boundary is marked by several of them. Conifers on the north and west sides. (CPAT Churches Survey)

TYPE POST MEDIEVAL, FINDSPOT. Rank: 1

SUMMARY

DESCRIPTION An incomplete cast lead or lead alloy two part cloth seal of probable post medieval date (1500-1800 AD). The seal comprises two discs conjoined by a central rivet and a folded linking strip. The cloth seal is broadly circular in plan but distorted by movement in section and profile. In general both sides of the seal are worn and abraded. Only one face has a stamped / impressed design present; this shows two initials separated by a central element within a circlet of pellets. Depending on which way round the object is viewed it is either: W I separated with a long cross the tail of which is forked at the base (one fork is better preserved and curved) Or I M separated by a crozier with a cross bar beneath the letters. The cloth seal is a mid matt grey colour with an even but abraded patina that covers all surfaces. Cloth seals were used to mark cloth from the 14th - 18th centuries. The use of initials here is most likely to represent a privy mark (Reavill. P).

SUMMARY

DESCRIPTION Incomplete fragment from a cast copper alloy crucifix of probable Medieval date (1200 - 1450). The fragment consists of the upper torso / body of a figure (known as the corpus) which would probably have been attached to a wooden cross, (PAS Database, 2011).

ARTEFACTS

1 copper alloy crucifix Incomplete fragment from a cast copper alloy crucifix of probable Medieval date (1200 - 1450). The fragment consists of the upper torso / body of a figure (known as the corpus) which would probably have been attached to a wooden cross. The figure is irregular in plan, being broadly cruciform in shape, and is also irregular in cross section. It measures 26.8mm length, 25.5mm width, is a maximum of 6.2mm thick and weighs 6.97 grams. The crucified figure is incomplete in that the lower part of the body has been broken. The upper part is depicted with outstretched arms, which are set at an angle of 90° to the trunk of the body. Both the arms terminate in rounded worn points. The head of the figure is oval in cross section and is set at a slight angle possibly with eyes upturned. Detail on the head has either been lost or was originally not cast. As the figure is worn any incised details have been lost. It is unusual that the figure is not depicted with a crown or a crown of thorns, however, during this period some crowns were painted on the wooden cross above the figure. The reverse of the figure is flat, suggesting that it was originally fixed to a either a wooden cross or something similar. No traces of the method of fixing have survived. The figure is a mid brown green colour with an even but worn patina which covers all surfaces including the break at the base of the figure. This would suggest that the damage occurred in antiquity, prior to deposition. A direct parallel has not been found for this example, (PAS Database, 2011).
