Thanks Phil. That clears that up. I won't be recommending any conditions.

Regards Nick

Morning Nick,

The below should be of assistance.

From what I can see, subject to the incinerator being on an approved specification list, DEFRA promote this method of fallen stock disposal, primarily as it prevents the need for collection and removal off site causing biosecurity issues.

Thanks

Morning Phil

Yes, this is normal accepted practice for poultry farms and the incinerator unit is specific for this activity. I will check with the applicant regarding any involvement of NRW and the environmental permit.

Hi Anthony,

Thanks for providing clarification. As you might imagine this has raised a few eyebrows in the community so I wanted to get clarification and pre-empt representations. I'll provide this to our EH section.

In terms of the process, am I to assume that this is a generally accepted practice in poultry rearing establishments and the incinerator unit is specifically design or specified for this purpose? It would also be helpful to know whether this element of the process is controlled through the NRW EPC process?

Many thanks again and kind regards.

Hi Philip

It's for the disposal of dead chicks/chickens at the farm. With each crop there are always losses -dead birds - through the growing cycle.

Hello Mr Atkinson,

I write with reference to the above mentioned proposed development.

I have received numerous queries from interested parties, including the council's Environmental Health team, relating to the purpose of the incinerator. Please could you confirm what the purpose of this unit is for?

Kind regards

Phil
